

West Brookfield, April 30-

Mr. Garrison:

1862

My Dear Sir,

57 I have rec'd your note of yesterday and feel bound to thank you at once for the very considerate and courteous manner in which you have treated me.

It was by no means unexpected but none the less grateful to me. I have felt no little disquietude since I took up this matter lest I should incur the charge among those who did not know me, of maliciously assailing the good reputation of another.

I am extremely ^{glad} that such is not your belief and that you were so kind as to expose your conviction to Mr.

Mantyn -

I have imagined that Mr. Allen was the individual suspected by Mr. Mantyn and I am glad to hear that he has written you - If I could see any possible explanation of Mr.
Mantyn's conduct in the particulars named and in many others not named, I would not feel compelled to hold him guilty but I do not see but the poor fellows must suffer a present punishment for the sake, as I sincerely hope, of future reform -

With many thanks, believe me,

Your Obedt Servant

Wm Lloyd Garrison Esq
